Impact of US tariff policy on our Group's performance

We would like to announce our views on the impact that the recent US government tariff policy will have on our Group's performance as follows.

Notes

1. Consideration of our business characteristics and impacts

The Group's main customers are hair and beauty salon operators in Japan, and sales to the domestic market through e-commerce and showrooms account for the majority of sales in its core product sales business. For this reason, as a company that is not directly dependent on exports to the United States, we believe that the impact of changes to U.S. import tariffs on the sales trends of our products will be limited.

In addition, as many of our private label products are sourced from overseas, we expect a positive effect in terms of reduced procurement costs, given the recent trend of a stronger yen in the foreign exchange market.

Therefore, at this point in time, we believe that U.S. tariff policy will have almost no negative impact on our Group's performance.

2. Future outlook

We will continue to closely monitor U.S. trade policy and changes in the international trade environment, but given our business model and customer structure, we believe that the direct impact on our business performance will be limited for the time being.

We will continue to carefully assess the impact of exchange rate fluctuations and changes in the international situation on our business operations, and will flexibly review our procurement strategy and consider utilizing risk hedging measures as necessary.

If it becomes clear that there will be a significant impact on our business performance in the future, we will promptly disclose this.
