3. Reasons for Selection of the Candidate for Accounting Auditor
   The Company has conducted a comparative evaluation based on proposals received from multiple audit firms, taking into account that the audit engagement period of the current independent auditor, including the period prior to the Company's listing, will reach seven years in July 2026, which is generally regarded as the upper limit for continuous engagement by a specific audit firm. As a result, considering that the audit engagement period of the current independent auditor has become long-term, the Company has determined that KPMG AZSA LLC is appropriate as the new independent auditor. This determination is based on a comprehensive assessment of factors including: the expectation of gaining a fresh perspective through a change of auditor; its experience in auditing companies engaged in the space-related business in which the Company operates; its audit framework suited to the Company Group's global business development and governance structure; as well as its independence and quality control system.

The Audit and Supervisory Board recognizes that the current independent auditor has established a sufficient framework to ensure that audits are conducted appropriately and properly; however, as the audit engagement period of the current independent auditor, including the period prior to the Company's listing, will reach seven years in July 2026, and in light of the general principle that the maximum continuous engagement period for a specific audit firm is seven years, the Company has decided to newly appoint KPMG AZSA LLC as its independent auditor.
