2. Reason for Revision

Regarding the forecast for net sales, the Company has decided to raise the forecast as customer demand remains strong, with performances in the first and second quarters of the fiscal year ending January 2027, progressing solidly and exceeding initial expectations. In addition, as strong demand is expected to continue driving favorable performance from the third quarter onwards, the Company has revised its the full-year net sales forecast upward from the previous forecast.

Regarding the forecasts for operating income, ordinary income, and net income attributable to owners of parent, the Company plans to actively invest domestically and overseas for business expansion. However, continued cost control and the profit increase effect associated with the increase in net sales are expected to absorb these increased expenses. Therefore, all of these figures are expected to exceed the previous forecasts.
