"Space Brothers" Joins note's AI Context Network A Platform Aggregating Fan Reviews and Official Information, Following Its Series Finale

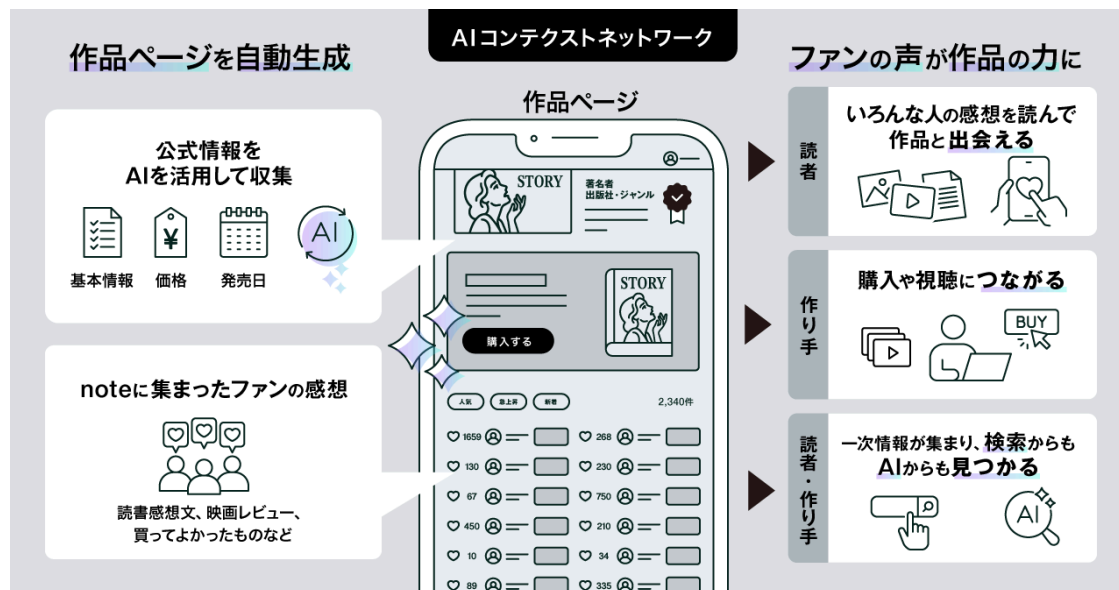

"Space Brothers" (by Chuya Koyama), which has reached its series finale in "Morning" (Kodansha), has joined note's AI Context Network. This integration brings together official information and over 2,400 fan reviews and analytical articles posted on note onto a single dedicated page for the work. Fans' real reviews and analyses convey the appeal of the work from multiple perspectives, allowing interested readers to proceed directly to purchasing the books. For creators, this is a place to expand opportunities for their work to meet new readers.

What is the AI Context Network?

The AI Context Network is a system that utilizes AI to automatically generate pages that aggregate fan reviews and official information for each work or product. It currently supports books, videos, and games, with plans to expand into all categories in the future. note has implemented approximately 150 official posting projects, including "#BookReview" and "#MovieReview," and the cumulative number of submitted review and commentary articles has reached approximately 2 million.

Readers who visit the work page can discover their next work by reading the reviews of various people. For creators, the voices of fans encourage purchases and viewership. By aggregating primary information, these pages become easier to find through both searches and AI. The voices of fans become the power of the work. The AI Context Network is a system that creates this cycle.

"Space Brothers" x note

At note, a culture where readers express their thoughts and analyses of works in their own words is deeply rooted. Regarding "Space Brothers," fan voices spanning over 15 years have been gathered, including analyses of famous scenes and articles discussing readers' own lives in relation to the characters.

Following the series finale of the work, it is anticipated that voices expressing regret over its conclusion and articles reflecting on the entire serialization will increase further. On July 22, the final volume is scheduled to be released by Kodansha.
