(2) Reasons for the revision

During the first six months of the fiscal year through March 31, 2027, consolidated income increased thanks to stronger than expected performance in Life & Healthcare and Electronics areas, as well as successful cost structure improvements in various businesses and foreign exchange effects.
As a result of these circumstances, the Company revised its consolidated earnings forecast for the full fiscal year ending March 31, 2027, which it made public on May 13, 2026.

Note: The above forecast was prepared based on information available as of the date of publication of this document, and actual results may differ from the forecast due to a variety of factors that may emerge in the future.

(2) Reasons for dividend increase

The Company positions the return of profits to shareholders as an important management policy and bases its approach on stable and continuous shareholder returns. In allocating profits, the Company maintains the stability of its financial base from a medium- to long-term perspective, while balancing investment in growth businesses with shareholder returns and comprehensively taking into account factors such as business performance and the dividend payout ratio.

Under this basic policy, the current Medium-Term Management Plan aims to raise the dividend level through progressive dividends in line with profit growth and an increase in the dividend payout ratio.

As described in “1. Revision of the full-year consolidated earnings forecast” above, consolidated operating income for the fiscal year ending March 2027 is now expected to reach 113.0 billion yen, exceeding the original plan. Based on the progress of business performance and the above dividend policy, the Company has revised the interim dividend from the previously forecast 19 yen per share to 22 yen, an increase of 3 yen. As a result, the annual dividend is expected to be 44 yen.

The Company will continue to strive to raise the dividend level in light of the progress of business performance and other factors.
